Juliette N. Kayyem is Executive Director of the Domestic Preparedness Project at the John F. Kennedy School of Government, a terrorism and homeland security research program at Harvard University. From 1999- July 2001, she served as former House Minority Leader Richard Gephardt's appointment to the National Commission on Terrorism, a congressionally mandated review of how the government could better prepare for the growing terrorist threat. Before that, she was a legal advisor to Attorney General Janet Reno, where she worked on a variety of national security and terrorism cases. She began her legal career at the Department of Justice as a trial attorney where she successfully litigated numerous cases, and was later appointed Counsel to the Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights.

Ms. Kayyem is an expert in, and writes frequently on, counterterrorism, law enforcement, homeland security and America's national security strategy. Her work has appeared in the New York Times, the L.A. Times, the Christian Science Monitor, and the Washington Post, as well as academic journals such as the Boston Review, National Defense and Studies in Conflict & Terrorism. She is co-author and co-editor of First to Arrive: State and Local Response to Terrorism (MIT Press). In related areas, she serves as a member of the bipartisan Constitution Project's program on Liberty and Security, the Council on Foreign Relations, the American Bar Association's committee on National Security Law and the Advisory Committee of the Migration Policy Institute. She has also served as adjunct faculty at Boston University School of Law and has taught at the Institute of Politics at the Kennedy School of Government. She has testified frequently before Congress and serves as an advisor to a number of governmental and private institutions.

Ms. Kayyem is a national security analyst for NBC News and National Public Radio's On Point.

She is a 1991 graduate of Harvard College and a 1995 graduate of Harvard Law School. She lives in Cambridge with her husband, David Barron, a Harvard law professor, and their daughter.
